

Kristina Ernst, RN, CDE

Kris Ernst is a Registered Nurse and Certified Diabetes Educator who has worked in the area of diabetes education and management since 1979 in both private and public health care settings. She has been an active member of the American Association of Diabetes Educator where she served as president in 1995-1996. Kris has also been a member of the National Certification Board for Diabetes Educators and has served as author and reviewer for a variety of diabetes education publications in peer related journals.

Kris began working with the CDC, Division of Diabetes Translation in the Program Evaluation Branch in 2002 providing technical advice to Diabetes Prevention and Control Programs (DPCPs). She also facilitates quarterly discussions with the state programs related to the Stanford Model Chronic Disease Self Management Program. Kris served as coordinator of the Diabetes Primary Prevention Initiative (DPPI) and is currently a program consultant with the National Diabetes Prevention Program. In addition, Kris is a member of the CDC's Chronic Kidney Disease team.